Lynn,

I am sure you know about the BLM's expired notice action plan for notices that are expired for more than 36 months.

S/053/0028 Thirsty Stone Notice is one of them. Although I am not sure why it wasn't addressed last year since the notice expired in 2009. Anyhow the file shows that UDOGM is holding a $2,500 bond to ensure re-vegetation of the site, which was reclaimed in May 2011.

The BLM is also selling boulders from this location which has resulted in some small recent disturbance.

What is your inclination? Should we leave the file open pending better re-vegetation or close it out and refund the $2,500? It doesn't matter to me, but I doubt we can ask the operator to come back and re-seed since the BLM is selling boulders here and re-disturbing the land.
